New AI system transforms document processing

A new artificial intelligence system is being used to analyze large collections of documents. The tool can extract key information, classify the content by topic and run semantic search across thousands of files.

Several companies are testing the solution in production environments to automate compliance reports, technical documentation and internal knowledge bases.

Experts say this type of technology will grow quickly in the next few years, especially in the software and technology sector.